The last to depart in December 1883 was Mrs. RAY, a miners wife of the Emerson community, the cause of departure was, she loved another coal-digger better than her husband. She left a husband and three children. She departed not unto death, but on the train for the north.

A fatal affray occurred down in the extreme southwest part of Macon 31 December 1883. It seems a mixed crowd of men and women were at Dan SHIPMAN'S home having a dance and frolic, and whiskey was being freely used. Dan DRISCOLL and Dave COOLEY got into a discussion as to whose turn it was to take part in the next dance, and DRISCOLL struck COOLEY over the head with stick of stove wood, the same blow striking SHIPMAN who was trying to part DRISCOLL and COOLEY. SHIPMAN has a bad gash an inch and a half long on his scalp. COOLEY was knocked senseless and was taken home where he lay all night, and his friends supposed he was in a stupor from intoxication we are told. Dr. JACKSON was called in the next morning, and found COOLEY was fatally injured by the skull being crushed in, and that there was a compression of the brain. COOLEY died, and DRISCOLL has been arrested to answer for his crime.

Mrs. Herbert JONES died at Plymouth, Pa. in December 1883. Her husband, Herbert had lived a long time at Bevier, Mo., he was at one time the leading contractor in house building and pit carpentry in Bevier and has followed the same business in a more extended way in Pennsylvania. Uncle Danny BROWN, a well known colored man, died 5 January 1888 in Macon at the advanced age of 92 years. He was born in Kentucky in 1796 and was the property of Mr. RUTHERFORD. Quite an interesting chapter in the old mans history is related. When but a young man he was sold to Wm. GOGGIN, and by him brought to Randolph county, Mr. GOGGIN was a well to-do farmer and distiller, and possessed a considerable sum in cash. On his death bed he called Uncle Danny to him and instructed him with money which he was directed to conceal until GOGGIN'S will was probated and an administrator appointed according to law. Several relatives of the deceased knew of the existence of the money, and endeavored to find it, but could not. As soon as the law had been complied with Uncle Danny brought from its hiding place over $3,000 in gold and silver, which was turned over to the administrator and distributed in accordance with the will, thus baffling those who had desired to make away with the property. It was this strict integrity of character which caused Uncle Danny to be respected by all who knew him. He was married to Hannah BOWELS and had eight children, a son Joseph BROWN, who served the city of Macon, as councilman and has held state in several secret societies.
